PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALLERS' ASSOCIATION

Organised professional football began in 1888 with the formation of the Football League. Early attempts were made to form a Players' Union but it was not until 2nd December, 1907, that the first meeting of the current Association took place at the Imperial Hotel, Manchester. It was chaired by the famous Welsh international, Billy Meredith of Manchester United. From that early beginning of players joining together to improve their working conditions, the Professional Footballers' Association (PFA) grew to become the highly respected professional body it is today, and is now the world's longest-established professional sportspersons' union.

The aims of the PFA are to protect and improve the conditions, rights and status of all current and former members through negotiation and collective bargaining agreements. The experience and expertise the PFA has gained since its formation ensures that it is able to provide the best advice, representation and assistance in all areas of players' careers and their lives beyond.

This involves many different aspects including enforcement of contracts, advising players in contract negotiations, representing players at disciplinary hearings with the Premier League, the Football League or The Football Association, assisting members in dispute with their clubs over fines or other disciplinary problems, providing insurance against death-in-service and premature retirement through injury and acting as Trustees of the Professional Footballers' Pension Scheme. Above all, there are collective bargaining agreements in place with The FA, the Premier League and the Football League under which no changes can be made to the rules and regulations affecting players without the agreement of the PFA.

Throughout its history the PFA has been successful meeting the challenges it has faced due to the strength of support from its members. Milestone disputes include the removal of the maximum wage in 1961 and the court ruling that football's retain and transfer system was illegal in 1963. In the 1970s, a commission on industrial relations eventually brought in all the present-day procedures that footballers enjoy today. The most important decision was the establishment in 1978 of the rights of players to change clubs at the end of their contracts. Since the Bosman judgement in the European Court in December 1995, our system has been refined so that all players are free at the end of their contracts to join another club. However, domestically, if an out-of-contract player is under 24 years of age a compensation fee will still be payable. This is in order to encourage clubs to develop youth systems.

In more recent times, the role of the PFA has been fully appreciated by its members who supported it in disputes with the Premier League, the Football League and The Football Association with regard to the PFA's negotiated entitlement to a percentage of television revenue in return for members' co-operation with televised interviews before and after matches. In particular, in 2001, members were balloted with regard to strike action with a union record return of 92%, 99% of whom supported the union taking industrial action if necessary. This overwhelming show of support and strength for the Association enabled a satisfactory agreement to be reached and strike action was averted.

The union is involved in all aspects of the game which affect its members but has also maintained a core focus of caring for the interests of the game as a whole. Here is a brief overview of the union's remit:

PFA Coaching: The role of the PFA Coaching department is to prepare its members for a secondary career within the professional game. In fact, over 70% of PFA members express a desire to stay within football when their playing days are over and the Coaching department therefore has a big role to play in their development as prospective coaches. It delivers and offers support with FA/UEFA qualifications at club sites and regional venues across the country, including delivery of the Level 2 award, UEFA B License, FA Youth Modules 1, 2 and 3, regionalised 'Safeguarding Children' and 'Emergency Aid' workshops, tailored UEFA A Licence assistance and support for members on the UEFA Pro Licence. The PFA's Coach Educators are former players who understand the needs of the professional game and the courses are exclusive to PFA members.

PFA Education: The main aim of the department is to encourage as many current and former PFA members as possible to undertake suitable academic/vocational qualifications to develop their career prospects, both within and outside the game. PFA Education supports all members in terms of offering information and advice while the PFA Charity provides grants for educational and vocational training.

PFA Community: The PFA is committed to raising the profile and awareness of the extensive work and participation of players in support of Community and Charitable activities. PFA Community involvement extends across many areas such as: health, education, social inclusion and Equalities, underlining the union's commitment to making a positive difference in society. As a department, there is a proactive approach to improve standards of support with players, and an encouragement for greater support from football clubs to adapt their philosophy toward corporate social responsibility.

PFA Equalities: Equality and Diversity is at the centre of all our work as the players union. Our dedicated Equalities team work with the various PFA departments, current and former players, clubs and the football community to promote inclusion and work towards equality across the game. The department is responsible for providing Equality and Diversity training programmes to first team players to ensure everyone is aware of the procedures to tackle discriminatory language, attitudes and conduct on or off the field of play. We are working to redress the under-representation of Black and Minority Ethnic (BAME) groups across the game and challenging the comparatively low numbers of BAME coaches and managers. Since 2003, the PFA have been pivotal in promoting the Rooney Rule to ensure transparency and equality of opportunity for all our members interested in a career in coaching and/or management. We are delighted with the progress of the women's game and have worked to ensure that contractual negotiations and advice is available for our female members who have been part of the union since 2000, when Fulham Ladies became the first professional women's team.

Equalities is an on-going, ever-evolving issue and we remain committed and focused in supporting our members regardless of age, race, religion or belief, gender, sexuality or disability. We also offer support for members experiencing pregnancy and maternity, gender reassignment and marriage/civil partnership.

PFA Wellbeing: The union has been addressing issues of emotional well-being and addiction for over 14 years, and now has a 24/7/365 counselling telephone helpline service available to members. In addition to the helpline, players past and present can access a national network of 62 fully-trained counsellors, all of whom understand the emotional roller-coaster that involvement in professional sport can entail. The PFA continues to offer support and funding to the Sporting Chance Clinic, allowing PFA members to receive residential treatment there. The combination of these services offers current and former PFA members a dedicated team of people and a safe and confidential environment to receive support and counselling.

PFA Accident Fund: The PFA's Accident Fund provides monies to ensure that all Premier League and Football League contracted players are covered for up to £25,000 each under the PFA's Accident and Sickness Insurance Scheme in the event that they suffer a specific injury or illness which results in their permanent total disability to play professional football. In addition, the fund provides financial assistance to current and former members towards private medical expenses and access to the Residential Rehabilitation scheme at St George's Park.

Player Management: The PFA communicates with football clubs on a daily basis to protect and serve the interests of all professional players and the Player Management department is an extension of that premise. The department provides hands-on representation for players at every stage of their careers as well as offering ethical 'best advice' at all times. It is important that a player seeks advice and representation in contractual negotiations with a club. The quality of that advice and representation is crucial. The sole aim of all our representatives will always be the best interests of the player. The combination of having experienced first-hand the demands of being a professional footballer as well as having strong business acumen means the representatives can relate to players, using their commercial experience to benefit the client.

PFA Commercial: The commercial arm of the PFA generates revenue opportunities for members and has developed close relationships with a number of companies who have become official PFA Business Partners. The department is responsible for providing members playing in the Football League with over half a million pounds worth of boot vouchers each season. PFA Commercial operates 'Legends Tours' which showcase former members in games and tournaments across the globe. The Football Live Service, run in partnership with Opta and the Press Association, provides employment for over 125 former members through radio, television and digital broadcasts. The agreement covers approximately 3,800 live matches each season. That's 5,700 hours of football before time added on!

FIFPro: The PFA is a leading member of FIFPro, the International Players' Association, which was instrumental in the changes to the international transfer system following the Bosman ruling. Senior PFA staff play key roles in FIFPro negotiations with FIFA and the European Commission.
